OSCEOLA SOLON WARNS LIQUOR MEN TO BE GOOD; PUBLICITY BILLS DEAD?

(Special to the Daily News.)

TALLAHASSEE, MAY 3.—THE SENATE TODAY, THROUGH ITS SELECTED COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INVESTIGATE THE CHARGES IN THE CASE, CONSENTED TO THE REMOVAL OF SHERIFF G. POTTSDAMER OF SUWANNEE COUNTY.

GOVERNOR TRAMMELL SENT TO THE SENATE THIS MORNING A LIST OF ALL THE SUSPENSIONS MADE BY HIM SINCE THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE LAST LEGISLATURE. WITH THE EXCEPTION OF POTTSDAMER, SHERIFF OF PALM BEACH COUNTY, SOUTH FLORIDA IS NOT AFFECTED BY ANY OF THE REST OF THE 14 SUSPENSIONS AND REMOVALS ORDERED BY THE GOVERNOR.

REPRESENTATIVE BRYAN OF OSCEOLA COUNTY SAID THIS MORNING THAT THE LIQUOR MEN ALONE ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE FAILURE OF THE DAVIS BILL, AND THAT THEY WOULD NOT ACCEPT THE PROPOSITION FOR THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT WHICH WOULD HAVE LEFT THINGS AS THEY NOW ARE FOR TWO YEARS. HE ALSO SAID THE INTRODUCTION OF OTHER REGULATION BILLS DEPENDS ON WHETHER THE LIQUOR MEN STOP TRYING TO EFFECT RECONSIDERATION OF THE DAVIS BILL OR OTHERWISE MAKE NUGATORY THE BILL AS IT HAS BEEN PASSED BY BOTH HOUSES OF THE LEGISLATURE.

ERNEST AMOS WAS REAPPOINTED STATE AUDITOR THIS MORNING, AND JOHN NEAL WAS RENAMED A MEMBER OF THE TAX COMMISSION.

THE HOUSE WILL NOT CONVENE UNTIL FOUR O'CLOCK THIS AFTERNOON.

IT IS UNDERSTOOD THAT THERE WILL BE NO PUBLICITY BILLS PASSED BY THIS LEGISLATURE, FOR THE REASON THAT ALL PRESENTED SO FAR AND THOSE UNDERSTOOD TO BE IN PROCESS OF DRAFTING ARE OBNOXIOUS TO THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE AND FRAUGHT WITH DANGEROUS POSSIBILITIES FOR FLORIDA.

SECOND TRIAL OF MRS. CARMAN BEGUN TODAY

MINNEOLA, L. I., May 3.—Mrs. Florence Carman faces another jury today in her second trial for the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey, of Freeport, in her husband's office after hearing "secrets" over a secretly installed dictaphone. The shot was fired from the outside through the window. Conflicting testimony had Mrs. Carman go down stairs and out of the back door just prior to the shot, while others showed that she was ill in bed. The case attracted worldwide attention and the jury disagreed. Mrs. Carman has been out on bail until surrendered by her bondsmen a few days ago for this trial. An extra panel of 100 jurors has been drawn. In the former trial the doctor and his wife stood by each other, while the relatives of Mrs. Bailey gave their fullest assistance to the prosecution. Sentiment in the district was greatly divided.

SAYS CLIMATE IS A VERY ECCENTRIC "COMMODITY"

Marcus H. Rogers, who stopped over in Daytona for a short time in company with Mrs. Rogers on their return north from Cuba where they spent the greater part of the winter, writing from Mill River, Mass., April 27th, for change of his copy of the Gazette-News to that place says:

"The weather here today and yesterday and Sunday, reminds me of the weather you did not have in Florida last winter, for it is as warm and delightful as the most devoted advocates of summer could ever desire. Temperature is about 80, and the birds are busy telling about it, and at the same time making arrangement for their anticipated families. The grass is very green, and the crocuses are blooming, and the other kind of crow-cusses, (which awaken some people in the morning), are finding some 'early worms,' and calling the hens around, proceed to gobble the worms themselves. And yet I remember, that 41 years ago tomorrow, and for about three days, there was good sleighing in our beloved Berkshire county. Climate is a very eccentric sort of commodity, and can be depended upon to cut up 'didoes,' where and when least expected or desired. But we escaped most of the weather that Florida furnished for her winter visitors, by being in Havana, 'where every prospect pleases,' and only prize fighting, cock fighting, and bull fighting are palmed off upon the helpless public, as a sort of subterfuge for the real thing, being more or less enjoyed by the citizens of Mexico, and the better part of Europe."

DEPARTMENT DISCONTINUES POSTOFFICE AT ROGERS

Postmaster Jackson, of Daytona, has been notified by the postoffice department at Washington that Rogers postoffice, in Volusia county, has been discontinued. Hereafter mail intended for Rogers will be forwarded to Lake Helen.

Attention was also directed to the fact that the name of the Florida postoffice heretofore known as Detroit has been changed to Florida City.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sawyer, who have spent several winters in Daytona and were this season located at 36 South Palmetto avenue, departed Sunday for their home in Saco, Me. Mr. Sawyer, during the season, assisted J. P. Pollitz in his grocery store on North Beach street.

MAY BE A ROW OVER FLORIDA GOVERNOR'S LIST OF SUSPENSIONS

TALLAHASSEE, May 3. — Governor Trammell was busy Saturday preparing a list of suspensions of Florida officials ordered by the executive department since the 1913 legislature adjourned. The governor's reasons for making the suspensions will accompany the list, which is to be presented to the senate this week.

Among the suspensions named in the list are those of the Duval county commissioners, the county judge of Bay county, and the sheriffs of Suwannee, Palm Beach and Hillsborough counties.

It is understood that a determined fight will be made in the senate to prevent confirmation by that body of the governor's action in several of the removal cases.

PRINCIPAL OF PUBLIC SCHOOL GAVE A "CHILDREN'S PARTY"

Miss Mabel Rogers, principal of the Daytona schools, entertained the members of the junior and senior classes of the high school and the faculty, at a "children's party" at the Rogers' North Beach street home, Saturday evening. Back to childhood days, for the staid and dignified seniors, juniors and teachers! All who attended wore children's clothes and many brought their dolls and toys to enjoy the evening. Various games were played during the forepart of the evening and then came the big event, the candy pull. Some of the candy compared favorably to the best ever manufactured by Nunnally, Whitman or Lowney, and then again some of it didn't, but everyone had a glorious time during its manufacture. Following the candy pull, other games were played, and the guests departed, having enjoyed an evening of unadulterated pleasure.

Geo. B. Strout, who has been driving the City hotel 'bus for nearly two years past, left Saturday on his return to Baltimore, Md., being called home by the recent death of his mother.

Parez Williams left Saturday on his way north, going to Birmingham, Ala., for a few days and then to Milwaukee, Wis., where he will remain for several weeks or until his parents and sisters go to Detroit, Mich., for the summer when he will join them in that city.

Mrs. Roderick Cant and daughter, Miss Florence Cant, who came to Daytona two weeks or more ago from St. Petersburg and have been guests at the Magnolia hotel, left Saturday for their home in Buffalo, N. Y. Mrs. Cant and daughter had been spending the season in St. Petersburg but have friends in this city.

Mrs. E. L. Oakes, who had been here as usual for the winter, occupying the west half of the O. W. Stevens double house on Third avenue, departed Saturday for her home in Blairsville, Pa. Mrs. Oakes feels a strong attachment for Daytona and has made numerous friends during the several seasons she has spent here.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Bearse and daughters, the Misses Clara and Eleanor Bearse, departed Sunday for their home in Hyannis, Mass. Mrs. W. I. Jacobs, Mr. Bearse's sister, who was with them during the winter, went north some time ago. Mr. Bearse has had a cottage erected on South Ridgewood avenue ready for their occupancy when they return next fall.

S. B. Green made a business trip to Jacksonville by automoblie Saturday and on his return Sunday was accompanied by Miss Mary Stewart, who will visit Mr. Green and family for some time at their home, the Cleveland, on Magnolia avenue. Warner and son, Harry Warner, who had been with Mrs. Beardsley through the season at her home, corner Orange and Palmetto avenues, departed Saturday for New Milford, Conn., via the Clyde line steamship, Mohawk, from Jacksonville to New York. Mrs. Beardsley was ill during the greater part of the season but is now very much improved.

HIS FOLLY

By GRACE KERRIGAN.

(Copyright 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Dan going to get married?" repeated Mrs. Archer in response to an inquisitive neighbor. "No, indeed, Mrs. Blake! Dan's never kept company with a girl in his life—not but what I want him to get married if he can find the right girl; but certainly I would know, if anyone did!"

"Of course you would," agreed Mrs. Blake, "but it seems so queer for him to be building a bungalow up there on his lot, spending every spare minute of his time on it, and doing every stitch of work himself—unless he was going to live in it. Perhaps he will rent it," with happy inspiration.

Mrs. Archer shook her head. "He says not. If you'll promise not to breathe a word, Mrs. Blake—"

"Of course I won't!" interrupted Mrs. Blake excitedly.

"Well—he says he's going to have the home ready, and when the right girl comes along, then he'll get married! It's a foolish thing to do, but Dan is a good boy, and if he enjoys building a nest before he finds a mate, why, I can't complain!" Mrs. Archer laughed comfortably.

"No—indeed!" replied Mrs. Blake, and then hastening her departure she transmitted far and wide the intelligence of Dan Archer's purpose in building the little brown bungalow on the hill west of his father's house.

And before another day had dawned the good gossips of Crystal Brook were chuckling over Dan Archer's "folly," as they called his undertaking.

So Archer's Folly became rather a joke in the village, but Dan Archer knew nothing of it. Few would have dared to hint the words to the steady-eyed young giant who went about his nest building so earnestly without a thought as to the absurdity of his endeavor.

There came a night when the wind howled around the bungalow and the snow beat against the walls until they were covered with a thick white mantle.

There was a fireplace in Dan's study and a great pile of hickory logs as well as a comfortable couch, so on certain nights when he had been studying closely Dan would decide to sleep there.

On this stormy night Dan turned away from the window and replenished the fire. Then he prepared for bed leaving a lighted lantern in the window of the living room.

"It's a bad night outside," he murmured

While the little village slept under the drifting mantle of snow, a horse and sleigh moved slowly through the road that led from the next village. Occasionally the horse stopped and breathed heavily and once it almost fell in its tracks.

"Uncle Nathan, I'm afraid that Sorrel can't go much farther," quavered a girl's sweet voice.

"Are you very near the doctor's, Folly?" The old man's voice sounded muffled from its thick wrappings of woolen comforter.

"I'm afraid I don't know!" and this time the girl's voice held a note of despair. "We are off the main road and I can't see a thing—ah, there is a light! Let us turn toward it—there must be a house. If we can reach it, perhaps we can send for a doctor from there."

The wind tore her words into fragments, but the old man understood, so he crouched down among the fur robes while Folly urged the horse to greater efforts. At last Sorrel toiled up a steep hill and finally dropped exhausted between the shafts with the guiding light only a few feet distant.

"It's a house on a hill," explained Felicia, as she helped her uncle from the sleigh.

The Daintrys lived in the adjoining village of Upton Center and the only physician in the village had been called away on an urgent case, so that when Uncle Nathan cut himself with an ax Felicia could only bind up the wound as best she might and then, bundling the old man into a sleigh, strive to reach Crystal Brook, three miles away.

By daylight Uncle Nathan had been made very comfortable, and the doctor having taken his departure Mrs. Archer took the weary girl down to the farmhouse and tucked her into bed, while Dan, after stabling Sorrel, went back to keep vigil by the injured man.

Dan came down to breakfast with Felicia, and his heart quickened as he saw that she was quite as beautiful as he had thought her the night before.

When Mrs. Archer learned that Uncle Nathan called his niece "Folly," she immediately confided the fact to Dan, and added the information that his neighbors called Dan's bungalow by the nickname of "Archer's Folly."

"Archer's Folly!" chuckled Dan, with dancing eyes. "That sounds pretty good to me, mother!" And his mother marveled at his meaning, while Dan added to himself: I wonder if she would mind being called 'Archer's Folly?'"

He asked her one day, and her answer was so satisfactory that they set about planning how the bungalow should be furnished.

"I am so glad you saved it till I came," laughed Folly, while they planned.

"I knew you would come some day," declared Dan contentedly.

HER EASTER JOY

By ESTHER JOYCE

MISS AMY CARTER leaned back in the dull shadows of the boarding-house parlor and watched the girl at the piano.

The girl had a true but quite untrained voice, and she sang in commonplace, soulless fashion the air of a four-part sacred song.

"Wasn't it shivery and grand where the bass took up the tune?"

The girl's hands came down on the keys with a crash. She had not dreamed that Miss Amy had come into the room. Most of the boarders did not come down stairs until the tea bell had rung. Miss Amy was almost as startled as the girl. She had been in the house five weeks and never exchanged a word with anyone save the landlady.

"Were you at St. Augustin's this afternoon?" inquired the girl, swinging around on the piano stool.

"Oh, yes," replied Miss Amy, simply, "I've been there every Sunday since I heard you sang there in the choir."

"I'm sure it is awfully kind of you to say so. I don't do much, you know, just one of the chorus, but it's $1.50 per, and you meet real nice people, too. I'd have joined the Musical league, too, only you've got to report for every rehearsal or lose your tickets for the last concert."

Miss Amy sat like one entranced. Here was a girl who did not simply buy admission tickets and listen to others. She was in it all, in the world of music, from which Miss Amy had always been excluded by the iron key, marked "Duty."

"How—how do you manage to get into a choir—or a league or anything of that sort?"

The girl felt flattered as she looked into Miss Amy's kindling face.

"Oh, they're always looking for good sight readers with fresh, clear voices in the big choirs. Sometimes you get paid, sometimes you don't. I didn't get anything last year. But the easiest way get in is to take lessons from the choirmaster—private lessons. Then Mr. Weston will put you in the choir to jolly you along, whether you can sing or not. You're new to New York, and you wouldn't believe the graft—"

The clang of the dinner bell drowned the latter part of the sentence, and the girl rose abruptly. Miss Amy followed her down to the dining room, but scarcely knew what was spread before them. What mattered food or drink or sordid landladies or gossiping boarders, when she had found the key to her paradise at last? Perhaps it was graft—perhaps the girl spoke thoughtlessly.

The next morning very early Miss Amy went shopping. She told the milliner she wanted a brown hat to match her suit. "No, not a toque like she had on; something younger," and she described quite accurately the hat which the girl had worn to church the afternoon before.

"I'll wear this," she said, "and you can send the old one home."

Next she went to the nearest drug store and studied the directory. "Weston, Albert, singing teacher, 121 West —— street."

As she left the drug store she spied a florist's window, and she stopped for a bouquet of violets. Then again she hesitated. The crisis of this, her new life, was at hand. She allowed three cars to pass, and then with firmly compressed lips she signaled for a hansom. At the boarding house everyone said that in New York one must keep up appearances. Perhaps if he thought she could afford to ride in hansoms he would overlook her vocal deficiencies.

Albert Weston, worn by his struggles with an indifferent pupil, was standing at the window of his studio when the hansom drew up before the building and the brown, wrenlike figure stepped cautiously from the vehicle and shot a questioning glance up the brownstone front.

"I'm glad I took the hansom," commented Miss Amy as she mounted the steps. This was life! An absurd thrill swept over her and brought a delicate and most becoming blush to her face.

Mr. Weston studied her curiously, hands deep in his pockets, when she asked almost timidly the privilege of studying with him. Prices, hours, everything seemed secondary to the fear that he might not accept her as a pupil. He tried her voice, paced the room a few moments and then said gravely:

"Yes, I will take you as a pupil, but I want to be quite frank with you. You will never be a great singer. You have a sweet, harmless, drawing-room voice, but I don't want you to go into the work with any idea of being a grand opera singer in time. You have [illegible] her hand.

"I understand all [illegible] my own pleasure, [illegible] sooner. It is just the joy of being able to sing for myself."

He stopped short in his [illegible] walk and looked at her. [illegible] ity, such humility, such lack of ambition, almost staggered him.

"Perhaps some time—when my voice is a little stronger—you might, that is, if it would be quite right, you might let me join your choir at St. Augustin's?"

"First vacancy there is," he assented heartily. "What our congregation likes is a number of sweet, correct voices. By the time someone gets tired of rehearsals or marries or moves away, I'll have your voice placed and be glad to take you on."

And so commenced the musical career of Miss Amy Carter, aged thirty-one, residence a second-class boarding house; occupation, spending a small inheritance which had come to her suddenly after a life of narrow drudgery and unrelieved sacrifice. At first her lessons opened and closed with almost monosyllabic conversation, but in time the musician delved beneath the heart which for years had almost starved for music. It had been born in her, she thought, but there had been work to do, so heavy that her hands had grown too rough and stiff to play the old-fashioned organ. There were two invalids to nurse when the village choir would have been glad of her services. And so she counted her love as dead and buried until the inheritance had come, and then—

"Well," she said, with a whimsical smile. "I thought I'd come to New York and hear the best music while the money lasted. I would have a taste of real life—what I have heard people call the joy of living."

Weston smiled to himself. She called this seeing life! And indeed these days she was quite in a flutter of excitement all the time. Weston had tickets he could not use for this concert and that. Matinees came just when he had pupils, and it was a shame to waste the tickets. He was tremendously diverted by this delicate, flowerlike woman, who felt that she was indulging in a mad orgy of music. He learned to look forward with keen interest to her comments on the concerts she attended. Self played so small a part in her enjoyment. It was always not how she felt, but how the music affected the audience. And gradually he discovered that she had a decided gift of criticism, which was developing under the course of reading he prescribed for her.

Something he knew, too, that his pupil of thirty-one had not discovered. Under the magic of indulging the one great longing of her lifetime she was cheating old Father Time, turning pages back and not forward. The faint color was always in her cheeks these days, and the voice, rising in her birdlike throat, was fresh as a girl's, lilting like a lark's in flowered meadows.

And watching her development, the tired man began to wonder what had come over him. He saw his work in a new light. The weight of drudgery slipped from his shoulders. The sense of wasted effort yielded to the infectious happiness of his buoyant pupil.

And so dawned Easter morning over St. Augustin's. Outside the doors the mob of sightseers swayed while the regular parishioners claimed first right to pews. Then came the inrush of strangers, the organist took his place, Mr. Weston raised his hand and the band of white-robed men and women filed into the choir loft. Out to the waiting multitude rolled the waves of perfectly balanced harmonies. A hundred voices, admirably selected, thought the congregation, and yet to the man who had trained them there came but a single voice. Her face was uplifted, her eyes dewy and tender, as with flutelike clearness the wonderful words reached him above the heads of the other singers:

"The strife is o'er,
the battle done;
The victory of life is won;
The song of triumph has begun.
Alleluia. Alleluia. Alleluia.

To the man it came not as a pean of triumph but a message of peace—and she had shown him the way!

He wanted to tell her now—this minute! The service stretched ahead of him interminably.

"Alleluia. Alleluia."

His glance caught and held hers. A startled expression flashed over her face. He was answered.

Old Beliefs of Easter.

The stories of the Easter hare, which children believe, is an old tale, doubtless originating in Germany. In certain sections of France children are taught to believe that the cathedral bells lay the Easter eggs. That belief has been transplanted to some of the old French settlements of America.

WHILE the transient population of Daytona and the peninsula cities has dwindled to a few score souls, there are still several thousand permanent residents here. And they have to buy food and clothing and shoes and summer comforts and amusements.

The DAILY NEWS goes into the homes of several hundred families of these people every day except Sunday. And, Mr. Merchant, many of those people expect you to talk to them, through the DAILY NEWS, about the things you want them to buy---and things they WANT to buy.

EFFECT OF THE WAR UPON AMERICAN MANUFACTURING

Theodore H. Price, the New York merchant, said:

"There is a fear that after the war is over, and the millions of men now at the front have returned to peaceful industry, we shall be unable to compete with the cheap labor of Europe, and that in consequence we shall lose whatever trade in manufactured goods we may have been able to develop during the military preoccupation of Germany and England, who are our chief competitors.

"It has been calculated that if the war lasts a year, or until the first of August next, the national debt of the belligerent nations will approximate [illegible].. Adding to this the indebtedness of cities and other political sub-divisions of the countries at war, there is a total of probably not less than fifty billion dollars, the interest on, and amortization of which will have to be provided for by taxes, which will be laid upon an aggregate population of about 350,000,000 persons. This population, therefore, shows an indebtedness of about $150 per capita.

"The United States department of commerce has just completed an investigation into the national, state and municipal indebtedness of the United States. Its figures indicate that the total political debt of this country, less sinking funds, i. e., net debt, is $4,050,467,713, or about $48.50 per capita for a population estimated at one hundred millions.

"This comparison between the political debt of Europe and that of the United States is introduced because it brings into relief the most important question to be considered in connection with the future. Are the people willing and able to submit to the heavy taxation which will be necessary to support the integrity of the enormous debt with which the war has saddled them and their posterity? If not, a partial or entire default will occur, and the result will be general financial demoralization, which will restrict trade throughout the world, whether it be intranational or international.

"There are, however, two different methods which may be followed by nations which find themselves unable to meet their political or national debts. One is direct repudiation and formal refusal to pay. The adoption of this method seems unlikely. The other method that may be followed by the nations unable or willing to meet their national debts, in inflation, or the legalization of an irredeemable paper currency, which gradually depreciates in value as compared with real property and so defers or gradually wipes out the obligations of the issuing government to its creditors. Unless this paper currency be ultimately redeemed in gold the effect is a cancellation of the obligations of the debtor to the creditor class and confession of practical bankruptcy.

"To the practical mind, the immediate future of America's trade as affected by the war, is therefore, largely dependent upon the effect of European inflation upon trade in general."

Moore's caratorial" artist, and has been coming to Daytona with Mr. Moore and family for a number of seasons. Both Miller and French are great ladies' men and no doubt many feminine hearts are now aching in Daytona because of their departure. Both young men professed to believe that their departure was worthy of a prominent place on the front page of the Daily News, but as they were not charged with any crime which would warrant their arrest they will have to forego this taste of publicity. Mr. French was on his way to Hartford, Conn., and Mr. Miller to New York.

BALL PLAYER FAILED TO REMEMBER HIS PROMISE

NEW YORK, May 3.—Billy Sunday tells this story about Ed Williamson, one of the stars of the old Chicago team:

"Ed was along with the Chicago club when the two teams, piloted by Al Spalding, made the tour around the world. The team crossed from England to France in a steamer during one of the worst storms that ever visited the English channel. Things got so bad that even the captain of the ship surrendered to despair. Ed grabbed two life preservers, strapped them around him and then offered up this prayer:

"'Oh, Lord, will lead a different life if you will spare this ship and our lives.'

"The ship arrived safely in port and Ed went back to Chicago and started a saloon."
